What are Climate Action groups?

They're people developing local solutions to the climate crisis to create fairer, greener communities. As part of a network, they're pushing the government to adopt a national climate plan to make the big changes we urgently need.

Who can join?
Anyone fed up watching the UK sleepwalk into climate chaos. Bigger and more diverse groups are likely to enjoy more success. So even if you can't commit much time, you can still make a difference.

How many are there?
We had 44 groups at the time Earthmatters went to print. We're aiming for 200 within the next year.

How do I join or find out more?

6 climate fixes your local authority could act on straight away

- 1 Identify whether every council recommendation would help or hinder climate, air pollution and nature plans.
- 2 Introduce workplace parking charges to fund better and cleaner public transport and cycling.
- 3 Roll out charging points to enable the rapid shift to electric vehicles.
- 4 Pinpoint spots for renewable energy in the local plan and oppose coal, oil and gas extraction.
- 5 Double tree cover on council-owned land and ensure existing trees are properly protected.
- 6 Get schools, hospitals and others to design menus containing more plant-based options - using less and better meat.

Most local authorities are doing far too little about the climate emergency. Some are even making decisions that will increase planet-warming emissions. We need them to listen and act.
